In this book, Erdal Unsal, a famous Turkish economist and politician discusses why his country has suffered inflation since the establishment of the Republic in 1923. He also provides a solution based on Islamic economic principles. Erdal Unsal's early life was not free from pain. His father died in 1949, when he was 8 years old. The government seized his father's property, which caused Erdal Unsal to fall ill because of hunger. His mother had to work in the fields to earn money to feed her children. He also suffered from an illness that left him crippled for 17 years. For these reasons, he developed a real love for Islam and made it his life goal to serve it by defending its principles with logical arguments in his written works and public speeches. He graduated cum laude from Faculty of Economics at Ankara University in 1968 and obtained master's degree with honors from the same faculty in 1969. In 1970, he obtained his doctorate from the same faculty. In 1974, he was appointed as an assistant professor. He has been a professor at Middle East Technical University since 1992.
